Melanie Mills, professor of communication studies, currently serves as the graduate program's coordinator of graduate study. The graduate program offers a Master of Arts degree in communication studies as well as an option in community college pedagogy. Dr. Mills' research and teaching interests are in the study of the methods by which employees construct and manage issues of stigma, crisis, and identity in occupational work groups. She teaches courses in research methods, theory, interpersonal, and organizational communication. She received her doctorate from Bowling Green State University in Ohio in 1990.
