

Mueller, Melinda A

Professor Mueller, Melinda A has been teaching Political Science at Eastern since 1995. She teaches courses in American political institutions and public policy. Her research interests focus on gender and campaign politics, and she is currently co-authoring work on the role that candidate gender plays in open seat House races in the 2006 midterm elections. She is also conducting pedagogical research on the development of a service learning program in the Political Science curriculum, focusing on Honors American Government. She and her co-author, Professor Barbara Poole, are presenting preliminary results of their research at the Teaching Professor Conference in Nashville, TN this May. The Faculty Development Support Grant will be used to fund travel and registration for this conference.
