EIU PROFESSOR SERVES ON STATE BOARD TO PROTECT ENDANGERED SPECIES
EIU Media Release
July 27, 2006
Tom Nelson views his role on the Illinois Endangered Species Protection Board as a link to his personal past and a bridge to Illinois residents' futures. The Eastern Illinois University biological sciences professor was appointed to the board by Gov. Rod Blagojevich to fill the vacancy left by the death of Alan Woolf, a nationally respected scientist who served as Nelson's doctoral adviser.

Nelson, past-president of the Illinois Wildlife Society, sees his new role as an opportunity to positively impact the state's environment to minimize negative consequences to wildlife and, ultimately, to humans.

"As a biologist, obviously I'm concerned about the impacts of development and habitat change in Illinois," he said, noting that as a result of land being used for urban and agricultural uses, less than one-tenth of a percent of the state's original prairie remains.

"We're a highly changed state, and that puts pressure on the natural ecosystems," he said. "When you have species that are disappearing from the state, that's an indication that we can do a better job of managing our resources for them and for us. So I feel the responsibility of the board is an important one."

The board, created in 1972 by the Illinois Endangered Species Act, monitors the status of plants and animals in the state and identifies species that fall under two categories: "threatened," which refers to species that are on the path to becoming endangered; and "endangered," which refers to species that are likely to become extinct. The board then advises the Illinois Department of Natural Resources on courses of action to correct the problems.

Among the Endangered Species Protection Board's duties is analyzing development projects that might threaten critical wildlife habitat, and then having the IDNR negotiate with developers to modify building plans to reduce harmful biological effects.

Currently, about 500 species are considered threatened or endangered in Illinois. But, on the positive side, conservation efforts have been able to get some species off of the lists, including bobcats, river otters and bald eagles.

Homecoming 2006 and Family Weekend 2006 Dates
Family Weekend 2006 is scheduled for the weekend of October 7, 2006, and Homecoming 2006 for the weekend of October 21, 2006. For suggestions on area lodging, contact the Charleston Chamber of Commerce at 217-345-7041 or the LCBAS Development Office at jsjoines@eiu.edu or 217-581-7969.

The board's information comes from sources including the state's Endangered Species Technical Advisory committees, which are comprised of a variety of wildlife experts, including Nelson.

Nelson is excited about the impact his service on the board will have on his students and his research.

"As a teacher, it gives me the first-hand experience with what's going on in the environmental field, which I can then bring into the classroom," Nelson said. "As a scientist, it really helps me to network and know what other people are doing throughout the state."

Nelson, who serves as coordinator of EIU's environmental biology program, joined the EIU faculty in 1994 after teaching and serving as biology department chair at Arkansas Tech University. At EIU, he teaches undergraduate courses in ecology and mammalogy, as well as graduate courses in wildlife management, landscape ecology and the history of science.

Now that he's on the state board, his research interests will likely continue to focus on protected species, including the yet-obscure ecology of several endangered bats, he said.

Nelson's wife, Dianne, joined him at EIU on July 1, when she became the founding director of EIU's new nursing degree program, which is slated to begin offering classes in August 2007.

EIU ADOPTS PROGRAM DESIGNED TO TEACH STUDENTS RESPONSIBLE DRINKING

EIU Media Release
August 1, 2006

Officials at Eastern Illinois University are using a new approach to addressing the issue of first-year-student drinking by implementing a new mandatory online alcohol education program being adopted by public and private institutions around the country.

According to Dan Nadler, vice president for student affairs, Eastern will be the first institution in Illinois to implement AlcoholEdu for incoming freshman students and their parents. He believes the Charleston campus to be among good company.

"Basically, from the outset, AlcoholEdu has been marketed to the leading universities in the country," he said.

Villanova University was the first in the nation (2001) to require its incoming freshmen to complete the course. The program has since been used on more than 450 campuses nationwide, including Princeton University, Syracuse University, the University of Southern California and the University of California at Berkeley.

President Lou Hencken gives his full support to Eastern's implementation of AlcoholEdu, pleased that the university is addressing a major problem that affects most university and college campuses.

"We researched the AlcoholEdu program quite thoroughly before deciding to commit," Hencken said. "Results at other campuses have been very positive, and we trust Eastern will reap similar benefits."

According to Nadler, the purpose of AlcoholEdu is not to tell students not to drink; rather, the program focuses on warning students about the risks of drinking.

"We believe AlcoholEdu will help educate our students," Nadler said. "Yes, students believe drinking makes one more social and increases one's likelihood of facilitating relationships and sexual opportunities. But we also know that most disciplinary issues are connected to excessive alcohol use."

Boomtown USA
-Jack Schultz, CEO of Agracel

Jack Schultz, CEO of Agracel, Inc., and past president of Eastern Illinois University's Foundation, has recently published a book focusing on small towns that thrive while other small towns are failing.

Order a copy of Boomtown USA: The 7 1/2 Keys to Big Success in Small Towns by calling 1-800-600-8085 or visiting www.boomtownusa.net.

Research by Andrew Wall, an education professor at EIU, indicates that, nationally, students who completed AlcoholEdu have reported "50 percent fewer negative health, social and academic consequences related to drinking." Listed among these "negative consequences" were class absences, blackouts, hangovers, unprotected sex, vomiting in public, injuries and poor athletic performance.

Eastern's incoming freshmen are learning about the AlcoholEdu mandate as they report for their summer orientation. The university has, for many years, included alcohol education in its orientation programs, and it has been easy to incorporate the new information into presentations given to both students and their parents.

The program calls for each student to finish the three-hour Web-based course before arriving on campus later this month. (Parents, too, may complete the program or, if they choose, just review the course's online information.)

Students are asked for information (kept confidential) regarding their individual drinking behaviors, and are then asked to take a pre-test and study three chapters, which include videos and graphics imparting facts and statistics about alcohol and its physiological effects.

Students are encouraged to complete the course in more than one sitting, taking it at their own pace.

Afterward, they are asked to take an online exam testing their general knowledge of alcohol consumption (i.e., blood alcohol concentration, activities increasing the odds of a blackout and hangover cures). If students fail, they are required to take it again until they achieve a passing score. The results do not affect a student's academic record.

"This is not a graded course, and there are no negative consequences for those who complete it," Nadler said. "Those not completing the course will have a hold placed on their educational records."

Students will be asked to complete a follow-up session approximately three weeks after classes begin.

Following completion of the program, AlcoholEdu will provide Eastern with summary reports, as well as recommendations and strategies the university could use to further aid its students in making wiser alcohol-related decisions. The company also has a staff in place to provide consultations to the university, and provides 24-hour-a-day technical support for any student who might have difficulty in accessing or taking the online course.

According to Nadler, incoming freshmen planning to attend Eastern in the falls of 2007, 2008 and 2009 will also be required to participate in the AlcoholEdu program. "We've signed a multi-year agreement (with the AlcoholEdu company), with the intent of implementing the program and letting it work for three or four years to determine its effectiveness," Nadler said.

He added, however, that Eastern may expand the program's scope "once we see how the initial roll-out goes." According to Nadler, "We may offer the program to those campus groups who are more vulnerable to high-risk drinking."

FORMER EASTERN DEPARTMENT CHAIR DIES

Excerpts from Daily Eastern News, July 18, 2006
Story by Kevin Kenealy

Former botany department chair William Wallace Scott, of Charleston, died June 24 at Sarah Bush Lincoln Health Center. He was 85 years old. Although his many achievements will not be easily forgotten, Scott will probably best be remembered for his easy-going personality.

"He was a very warm, compassionate individual," said surviving wife Jeanette of Charleston. "He was truly devoted to student research. He was always there to help students and graduate students, which were many."

More Country Music for Laughin', Lovin' and Livin' It Up
-Gene Newport, Class of 1957

Gene Newport, an EIU business alumnus ('57) and 1977 Distinguished Alumnus from the EIU School of Business, has written another book that may interest EIU alums. Newport, author of Management Up, Down, and Inside Out, is a professor of management and dean emeritus at the University of Alabama.

Newport has generously arranged to donate proceeds from the purchase of Country Music... by EIU alumni and friends to benefit the Theodore W. Ivarie Leadership & Innovation Fund.

Scott certainly was devoted to his students. Before taking a position at Eastern, he was a visiting professor at the University of Wisconsin in Madison, worked as faculty at Virginia Tech in Blacksburg, James Madison University in Harrisonburg and the National Science Foundation in Washington D.C. When he became chair of the botany department at Eastern in 1968, he did not want to leave the position.

"He came out here as head of the biology department, and then got a different job in Old Main, but he went back to the biology department because he missed being around the students," said son Robert Scott, of Charleston.

During World War II, Scott served in the Navy Medical Corp in the Pacific, and he later served with the United States Marine Corps in Korea during the Korean War.

Scott served as president and executive secretary-treasurer of the Phi Sigma Biological Honor Society, director of the Virginia Jr. Academy of Science, president of the ACHS (Association of College Honor Societies) and was active on the boards of the AIBS (American Institute of Biological Sciences) and the AAAS (American Association of the Advancement of Science). He was also a member of Sigma Xi and Phi-Kappa Phi Honor Societies and belonged to the Sons of American Revolution.

FOREIGN TOUR HAS WOMEN'S BASKETBALL ITALY-BOUND

EIU Sports Media Release
August 1, 2006

Following a bounce-back season last year that featured a return to the Ohio Valley Conference Tournament, Eastern Illinois women's basketball is heading to Italy on a foreign tour later this month.

The Panthers depart Monday, Aug. 7 and will play four games before returning to the Midwest on Friday, Aug. 18. The group of nine rising seniors and sophomores began pre-tour practice on July 26. The tour begins in Venice with Florence and Rome representing the other major stops before departure.

Head coach Brady Sallee and his entire staff - assistant coaches Anne O'Neil, Quacy Barnes and Megan Sparks - is accompanying the team. The Milwaukee-based Sport Tours International organized the trip and is sending a guide. Sparks will be keeping a diary and sending back pictures for the EIU Athletics website.

The EIU women's last foreign tour was in 2002, when the team traveled to Australia prior to the opening of the fall semester. Sport Tours also organized the men's basketball tour of Costa Rica in May of 2004.

"I felt like going into my third season, I would have enough of my recruits in and those in the upper class ranks would be well enough versed in our system that we could go over there and get a lot out of it," Sallee said. "I think timing wise it's perfect, going into a year where we've got a pretty good group coming back and we can get a head start on what we're trying to accomplish."

The itinerary calls for the Panthers to play one game in Venice, Scandiano (en route to Florence), Piza and Pescara (a day trip from Rome). The chance to play some sanctioned games is simply an added bonus though; the real benefit of the tour is the cultural experiences the women of EIU basketball will receive.

Topping the to-do list in Venice is to take both a walking tour and water taxi trip through the city. Highlighting the three-day stay in Florence is a tour of Accademia Gallery, which is home to Michelangelo's David statue. Lastly, trips to the Spanish Steps and Vatican City are on the agenda while the Panthers are in Italy's capital.
However, Sallee says that he plans to expose his players to much of the Italian country side and small towns that make up one of the most historical countries in the world. Numerous stops are planned for the bus trips between the major metropolitan areas.

"I'm not concerned with who we're playing, the important thing is what we get out of this," Sallee said. "Not only from a basketball standpoint, but rather team chemistry and educationally speaking. I want them to have a great experience. Being able to do this is priceless for what it does for your team in every avenue in what we're doing. The basketball part speaks for itself, getting that extra time with your team is a no-brainer. The team chemistry, togetherness and stories they'll have - that's the most important thing.

On the court Sallee said he plans to experiment with his offensive sets. The Panthers are looking to replace the scoring and leadership of the graduated Sparks, who led the team in points and minutes per game last season, yet are still viewed as an up-and-coming group because of the large number of underclassmen that contributed in a big way last season.

Headlining the rising sophomore class is Rachel Galligan, the 2006 OVC Freshman of the Year. Whereas last year the EIU offense was primarily centered on perimeter scoring, Galligan's continued development in the post could allow Sallee to reinstate some offensive elements from his first year on the Panther bench. Pam O'Connor, who ended her career as the No. 2 all-time scorer in program history, was the primary offensive focus that season.

"I think we need to tailor this offense like we did last year with Sparks and we did the year before with Pam," Sallee said. "Now we're looking at Rachel inside, maybe doing some stuff we did with Pam to get Rachel some more touches. And then I think we have some people on the perimeter that can score it up and we need to be able to play to their strengths, too.

"Let's face it we're losing one of the best guards [Sparks] to ever come though this program, a leader that everyone kind of looked to. Well instead of going into next year wondering how we were going to fill that void we get to try it out now." The goal defensively is to improve in the half court. Because only the nine returning letter-winners will be making the trip, Sallee's trademark full-court pressure is not the game plan.

The Panthers' four games will all be played using FIBA rules. The most notable differences between the international game and NCAA rule book include: a 20-foot-6 3-point line, the trapezoidal lane, a 24-second shot clock, an 8-second back court violation, and timeouts are not permitted while the ball is live.

"We're not going to be so concerned with wins and losses but more concerned with this extra time in the summer and have it lead into a successful season," Sallee said.

LINNEA UTECHT NAMED ASSISTANT COACH
Linnea Utecht, a former First Team All-Mid-Continent Conference performer and later assistant coach at Oakland University, has joined Kim Schuette's Eastern Illinois softball staff as an assistant coach. "I am pleased to have Linnea join our Panther softball program. She is a very outgoing, kind, young professional who is eager to learn," Schuette said. "She has great passion and energy for this game that I believe will be very contagious with our team, recruiting and in the Charleston community."
